

WE VOTED REPUBLICAN IN 2000.

We were given the idea that there were weapons of mass destruction, but where are they? They said they were so sure. When I was over there I looked. I was on an intelligence gathering team, we all looked. We found nothing. It was just a lie. That wasn't a proper use of American troops. It wasn't a proper use of my life, my friends' lives, or the marines I saw die around me.

I've been a lifelong Republican since I was old enough to vote and I thought that Bush would be fiscally conservative. I feel betrayed. I don't believe that a government should be engaging in reckless spending, recklessly stretching the military to the point of breaking, and recklessly trying to alter the constitution that this country is built upon. That's why I'm voting for John Kerry.

It upsets me that we can spend billions and billions of dollars trying to liberate other people when there are so many people in this country who need help. They don't need liberation, but they need healthcare. They need food on their table. They need education. It's time to invest in this country. That's what I want to hear about. I'm still a Baptist, but I'm no longer a Republican.

I spent my life helping to make America respected, making America an example for other countries, making America a symbol of values and of morals the world would be interested in following. I feel my work has been dissipated. I feel my life's work has been squandered away by this administration.
